Voices from the Crosswalk: Insights from Focus Groups with School Crossing Guards

Crossing guards serve on the front lines of school travel safety, yet their voices are often left out of decision-making and training development. This report shares insights from focus groups held in urban communities across New Jersey, where crossing guards described serious on-the-job challenges, from drivers ignoring their presence and blocking crosswalks to rising verbal abuse and red-light running. Many noted that even parents and teachers contribute to unsafe behavior during school drop-offs and pick-ups.

The report also highlights concerns specific to dense, high-traffic areas, such as signal timing issues and the difficulty of identifying safe crossing gaps. It calls for updated training materials that better reflect real-world conditions, public education campaigns to encourage safer and more respectful behavior near school zones, and greater opportunities for crossing guards to engage directly with families and communities.
